On June 26, three works by Aboriginal dance artists take to the stage, each work an expression from a unique aboriginal nation.

Byron Chief Moon is of the Blood Nation in southern Alberta. He is a well know dancer, choreographer, actor and teacher now residing in Vancouver. His dances fuse his many talents into transformative experiences. Blood Alley is riveting in its powerful ability to reveal deep seeded histories, even when the individual is disconnected from that history's source.

Gaétan Gingras has a long history of performances in Canada and abroad. Mémoire de sang (Blood Memory) is a contemporary ritual dance in honour of his Mohawk/Iroquois ancestors. Gaétan has worked to combine the personal with the spiritual, while still being universal and meaningful for spectators.

Red Power Squad is the here and now, representing a new generation of artists who collide Hip Hop youth culture with aboriginal identity in ways that are startling and new. A bboy / bgirl crew who also include MCs and DJs, their performances open with traditional dances in full regalia that morph into break-dance forms, reflecting the growing influence of urban cultures on traditional communities.

Celebrating the occasion of Canadian Multiculturalism Day on June 27, the CDF presents a stunning gala featuring some of Canada's most exciting voices from culturally diverse communities. There is a dance that originated in different heritages, transposed itself through migration and is now enriched through the global exchanges emergent in Canadian culture. Three groups will deliver four separate choreographies, providing audiences with an event that symbolizes the transformative power located in the diversity of Canadian dance.

In the creation of Transmission of the Invisible, Peter Chin, Artistic Director of Tribal Crackling Wind, travelled to research the ritual forms of Cambodian dance. The cultural and human losses of the Khmer Rouge era forms the background to this work, but with a primary focus on the subsequent recovery and rebuilding, especially of the arts. Transmission of the Invisible expresses how culture is so easily annihilated, but how it also survives through intimate interaction. His ensemble of sophisticated performers includes Andrea Nann, featured at CDF in 2008, and is augmented by two dancers from Cambodia.

Artistic Director Menaka Thakkar has devoted her life to creating dance of South Asian heritage. Her company has travelled across Canada and abroad, and for this performance will feature a special cross-generational choreographic showcase, performing Agni Ratha (The Fiery Chariot), a world premier, and Riaz, choreographed by Natasha Bakht, a student of Menaka's and now one of Canada's world-renowned international performers. The juxtaposition of styles between generations will highlight the passion of Bharatanatyam, the classical Indian dance form at the foundation of their choreography.

In Breakin Out, Patrick Parsons, artistic director of Ballet Creole, has created a dance that showcases the virtuosity of his company's male performers. His dances are created from African roots infused with Caribbean sensibility, and defined by his presence in the Canadian community. This is dance that is as energetic as any in Canada today, overflowing with rhythm, energy, machismo and nuance.

Dancing through Cultures is two days of magical dance, dance that reflects Canada's values – inclusivity and diversity.
